

Messages from House of Commons workshop Malala Day, 12th July 2013

Resolution 1:

Pass a Security Council Resolution as a priority that urgently recognises the global education crisis and that takes quality and fixed steps that are both realistic and monitored, ensuring the enforcement of the actual policy in the bid for global progress.

Resolution 2:

We believe that for children to be able to learn and thrive, the government needs to remove the barriers to education, to allow compulsory state paid education for nine years. This could be achieved by international aid and community support by other national governments.

Resolution 3:

We want education for all! If we have the right to all these resources and education, why don't the children in developing countries have them too? Respect culture – but use culture to respect citizens. Everyone should be able to get the same education, boy or girl, disabled or not! Education is a tool to liberation.

Resolution 4:

Train teachers who will be committed, inspiring and motivating. This paired with a high quality curriculum will ensure that children are educated to realise their full potential, and have high ambitions. Thusly, these children will become active members of the society promoting equality for all. Children don't just want education – the word want flew out the window a long time ago – they need it! This can't be taken as another flimsy petition, the millennium goal is approaching and we need to take action now. It's about time we got our voices heard and eventually, we will get 57 million children the rights and education they deserve.

Resolution 5:

The world needs money to be focused directly on education and monitored correctly to give everybody access to school.

Resolution 6:

Enabling all children to speak out and have the support and confidence to make decisions regarding their education.
